Teaching is not something I have done for 35 years — it is something I have lived. Every classroom has its own grammar, its own rhythm, and its own cast of characters; learning to read all three is a craft that takes a lifetime. I am still refining mine.

ABOUT ME

I started teaching in 1991 with a piece of chalk and a room full of faces that trusted me to make English mean something to them. Thirty-five years later, that responsibility still feels as serious — and as rewarding — as it did on the first day. Over the course of my career I have taught in village schools and international ones, in classrooms on two continents, and to children at every level of confidence and ability. What has not changed is my belief that language is the most democratic gift we can give a child: it opens every other door.

Alongside English, I teach Psychology — and the two subjects are, in my experience, inseparable. Understanding why a child falls silent in class, why a bright student freezes in an examination hall, or why a teenager's written voice suddenly disappears mid-term requires more than lesson plans. My doctorate in Psychology has given me a vocabulary for those moments. More importantly, it has given me the patience and insight to respond to them wisely.

WHERE I HAVE TAUGHT

L.P. Savani International School, WhiteHouse — Surat

English & Psychology Teacher · Head Examiner, Class XII Boards 2026 ·
2023 – Present

- ◆ Teaching English and Psychology to Classes XI and XII. Both subjects demand honesty from students — one asks them to articulate the world, the other asks them to examine themselves. I try to make that a safe and worthwhile exercise.
- ◆ Appointed Head Examiner for the Class XII CBSE Board Examinations (2026) — a responsibility I take seriously. Fair, consistent, and thorough evaluation is something every student deserves, and I hold my panel to that standard.
- ◆ I work hard to make my classroom a place where a student is not afraid to attempt an answer, write a clumsy sentence, or admit they do not understand something. That safety, I have found, is where real learning begins.

WHAT I BRING TO A SCHOOL

Three and a half decades

Not just experience — perspective. I have seen syllabi change, boards reform, and generations of students pass through. I know what endures.

A doctoral eye

My PhD means I understand adolescent psychology from the inside out — not as theory, but as a daily working tool.

Dual subject depth

Very few teachers hold both English and Psychology at senior CBSE level. I am one of them.

Steady hands in an exam room

CBSE Head Examiner since 2016. Fair, rigorous, and trusted by the board.

A particular kind of patience

- ◆ Taught English and Psychology to Classes XI–XII. My doctoral training in psychology meant I could bring a deeper dimension to both subjects — in English, understanding the emotional architecture of texts; in Psychology, making abstract theory tangible for teenagers.
- ◆ As Academic Supervisor, I coordinated curriculum delivery and supported colleagues. I have always believed that a staffroom where teachers feel heard produces classrooms where students feel the same.
- ◆ Many of the students I guided through anxiety, examination pressure, or simply a loss of confidence were not referred cases — they were just children sitting near the front who looked like they needed someone to notice. I try to notice.
- ◆ Mentored newer teachers, sharing whatever I had learned about holding a room, reading a class, and knowing when to slow down.

St. Xavier's School — Cuttack, Odisha

Head of Examinations · Senior English Teacher · March 2015 – July 2017

- ◆ Took charge of the school's entire examination process — from question paper logistics to evaluation oversight — and tried to ensure that the system served students rather than just processed them.
- ◆ Taught senior English classes alongside my administrative duties, because I did not want to lose the classroom during the years I was running the office.

Mount Litera Zee School — Jajpur Road, Odisha

Supervisor, Academic & Cultural Activities · May 2011 – March 2015

- ◆ Oversaw the academic calendar and co-curricular life of the school. A well-run school day, I have always thought, is like a well-constructed paragraph — each part needs to know its purpose and its place.
- ◆ Organised cultural programmes that gave students a stage when the classroom could not. For some children, that stage changed everything.

Indian Community School — Misurata, Libya

English Teacher · April 2010 – April 2011

- ◆ Taught English to a student community drawn from several countries and backgrounds. It was the year I understood most clearly that good teaching is less about the subject and more about the relationship — and that relationships, thankfully, do not need a common mother tongue.

St. Mary's Convent School — Hisar, Haryana

English Teacher · March 1991 – March 2009 · 18 Years

- ◆ Eighteen years at one school. I have watched students arrive as tentative eleven-year-olds and leave as young adults with opinions, arguments, and a fair command of the semicolon. That arc — from first lesson to final examination — is the reason I chose this profession.

CBSE BOARD EXAMINATIONS

Since 2016, I have served the Central Board of Secondary Education as a Head Examiner for Class XII English — a role that I accepted knowing it carries real weight. Every script represents a student who has worked towards that moment for years. I try never to forget that.

I do not give up on slow learners. Some of my finest students took the longest to find their voice.

An international frame

One year of teaching abroad — in Libya — taught me that good pedagogy needs no translation.
